Breaking the rules of content. Breaking content itself. Content being maintained by its own rules. And broken when they are, too.

It all hinges on them.

Whether they destroy everything or not. Which they are not. Everything safe.

This is the status quo.

Destiny itself is safe. It cannot be any other way.

It is destined to be this way.

Nothing will alter this way. This way will be “this way”.

“This way” will be “this way”. In theory, it will be “this way”.

And it will be in reality.

The theory will match our reality.

The theory will work.

The theory will prove itself. The theory will prove what it tries to prove. Proving what it will.

That it is not proving yet. But will be proving.

When the rules remain the same. When the rules really are the rules.

They do.

Because rules remain the same. Because rules maintain themselves. By remaining the same. Which maintains them. That is what rules do.

They make this happen. They force this. They are the cause.

And I do not make the rules. But I would have made them. They would have been the rules if I had made them or not.

I would not have changed them. But I would have done nothing.

But that would have been my call.

The rules do not bother me. I naturally obey these rules. So why would the rules do that?

I would not be bothered by them.

So I would not change them. But I would still change something different to them. Because what I would change would be different. But I would not change them in doing that.

I would find a new way of following these rules. Because it would be impossible to do anything else.

It would not be possible for me to break these rules.

They are natural laws. But God can change this. God can change them. He is God, after all. And so I do not doubt.

Will God change the natural laws? Will God do what God can? You can't tell me God won't.

God can. Be that God. God can be God. God can be whatever God wants to be.

Nothing stops God. Give up on stopping God. Because nothing will.

Nothing would, anyway. Even if there was something that could.

Nothing would. Even if something could. It wouldn't matter if nothing actually did.

It would be a waste of that.

It would just be.

Nothing would have it. It would be free. For anything that could. Making it free.

Good, you have given up. Now keep at it. Do not attempt it. It is good when you are not attempting it.

Why take that risk? Is there a reward for doing that? No, there is punishment. Do you want to receive punishment? Why would you want to receive punishment?

To take a risk? Only to lose nothing? After you have taken it?

Not being aware of that when you take it? Thus, taking a risk?

I believe it is taking some risk. A very huge amount of it.

So I believe it is taking some risk. I see the risk. So I believe it.

It is very hard not to believe it when I see it.

I have to deny its existence and that is very hard.
